

I am writing to express my concern regarding the deregulation of Canada Post Corporation. I understand that the deregulation being considered now is in regards to international lettermail only, but what about the future? Any deregulation now opens the door for future deregulation. I fear a time when Canada Post would only serve the towns and cities; and that rural Canada, with it's low population and large geographic area, would be left for other businesses to serve. Without the revenue generated in the towns and cities to offset their high costs; these other businesses would no doubt pass along these costs and charge rural Canadians significantly more for their postal services. Our "universal" and "economically viable" postal service is at risk.

Say NO to deregulation!

C. Devine
NS