

The last review of CPC was a direct result of CPC competition lobbying the government for access to CPC business. This resulted in 10,000 job losses as CPC gave up its Unaddressed Admail business. This time is no different. It is simply political interference. CPC has proven its ability to earn profits, pay taxes and dividends under changing business environments. The last thing CPC needs is political tampering to undermine its exclusive privilege to deliver letters giving it the revenue required to provide universal service to all Canadians.
