

Dear Panel,

The current government is continually eroding public ownership without public consent. We have paid for our national corporations for decades and we have never given consent to have them "deregulated" (privatized) nor dismantled nor sold off.

As it is, the government decreased services by changing our postal boxes to "condo-boxes", allowed private business entities to open postal services, and contracted out deliveries - is this not enough punishment to citizens who used to have a superior postal delivery system?

In the name of the common good, please retain and increase the services of our national Canada Post.

We all know that by everyone pooling their money, we get a better national service. As well, the national service has accountability to the citizens and government, unlike privatized situations where privacy and responsibilities are muddied, along with costly legal actions which ensue.
