

Canada Post Corporation Strategic Review

Dear Sir/Madam,

I firmly believe that postal service is a public good and should be publicly regulated to ensure that the service is equitable for all Canadians, in all regions, both rural and urban. It is clear that the Canada Post is working well and making money. I don't understand why what now is a good working universal public service should be deregulated with the high risk of creating more problems than would be solved.

My argument is for balance and diversity in the body politic, where we maintain a good mix of private enterprise and universal public services. I believe the pendulum has swung way too far towards the promotion of "private enterprise" with deterioration in universal public services.

Please reconsider, what in my view is a misguided policy direction.

Thank you
